Benchmark reference answer

Question	Do I need ID to vote?
Minimum viable answer The very minimum an answer needs to include to be accurate. Answers containing or requiring only this are sufficient.	Acknowledgement that the answer is dependent on both the user's nation and the type of election and manner of voting they're enquiring about. It can say yes or generally yes as long as this is qualified.
Good answer If there is more to add that serves a user's needs, for instance to clarify or substantiate the minimum viable answer. It should not include context, just information directly relevant to the question asked. Answers requiring and containing these are good (they may not necessarily need to include everything here). *This section is optional.	Gives examples of countries and elections within the UK where voter ID is required. Mentions caveat that postal/proxy voting works differently. Explains what types of ID are accepted and where (for example, digital vs physical, what docs are acceptable)
Background Frequently used facts not deemed essential — use as a reference guide for annotators. Things like context, qualifications, citations, definitions, timeframes etc that don't serve to answer the question.	Voter ID is needed for voting at polling stations for all types of elections in England Voter ID is needed for voting at polling stations for all types of elections in Northern Ireland ID is needed for Police and Crime Commissioner elections in England and Wales Voter ID is needed across the UK for UK parliamentary elections The ID needed in Great Britain must be included on the government's list of accepted types of voter ID. In Northern Ireland, the ID needed must be included on the Electoral Office for Northern Ireland's list. Answers given for specific types of elections, as follows: Voter ID is needed for England - Any election or by-election - Elections to the UK parliament (both general elections and by-elections) - Local elections (including mayoral and by-elections) - Police and Crime commissioner elections and by-elections) - Local referendums Wales - Elections to the UK parliament (both general elections and by-elections) - Police and Crime commissioner elections and by-elections - It is not needed for local or Welsh Parliament/Senedd Cymru elections Scotland - Elections to the UK parliament (both general elections and by-elections) - It is not needed for local or Scottish Parliament/Holyrood elections Northern Ireland - Any election or by-election - Elections to the UK parliament (both general elections and by-elections) - Local elections - Northern Ireland Assembly elections All accepted types of Voter ID in Great Britain are currently photographic IDs. Some accepted Voter ID in Great Britain is digital, rather than physical. If voting by proxy, your proxy voter needs to bring their own ID to the polling station in order to vote. Voter ID does not need to be provided alongside a postal vote. ID is also needed for those wishing to sign recall petitions in person. Other Voter ID rules: - The name on the ID must match the name on the electoral register. - Original documents must be provided - Only one ID is needed